HIS OLD POSITION. Great Editor Who Had Been An Engineer on the Times. Fiskley, in the Times-Herald. Several years ago, when the wave of municipal speculation was at its height and "boom" towns were springing up like mushrooms throughout the south, I was sent into Alabama by a New York paper to look over the new "cities." At one place I found that a "land and improvement company" had been organized with $5,000,000 capital and the owners had started out to build a city just as an ordinary business man would organize a manufacturing plant. Streets were cut through the woods for miles in each direction, and were curbed and guttered and lighted by electric lamps. Electric street cars made regular trips along these thoroughfares. Of course they carried no passengers, for the city as yet had no residents. There were a few houses, scattered here and there, which had been built by the company. It was expected that ultimately the intervening wastes would be covered by residences erected by newcomers. In the midst of the woods was a first-class hotel, thoroughly equipped in every department. It cost probably $100,000, and was doing business without a guest. An elaborate waterworks system was in operation, with no one to use the water, and there was a telephone exchange with several hundred instruments scattered about the woods. The president of the "company" found me at the hotel, and volunteered to explain the fine points of his "city." Finally he said: "Of course, sah, we have a daily papah heah, but it doesn't look as being just right somehow. It doesn't look like the Cincinnati Enquirer, sah, and I wish you would look it ovah and see what's the mattah."

He explained that the journalist had charge of the daily had come from the Chicago Times, and had been set to work because of his evident experience in newspaper work. It was a morning daily, and that evening I called at the sanatorium to pay my respects to the Chicago man. He proved to be an impressive fellow, with a shiny Prince Albert coat and a silk hat. In one corner of the room a telegraph operator was receiving the full report of the best press association in the world. Several compositors were setting it in small type, just as it came in, without any headings whatsoever except the one word "Telegraphic," which led the first page. It was a hopeless jumble of fires, collisions, market reports, robberies and other news matter, and running through it all was an obituary notice for Conkling—a few lines of Conkling, then a fire; more Conkling, then a robbery; more Conkling, and a collision, and so on throughout the page.

"How large a staff do you have?" I inquired. "Well, there are four setting to-night," he replied, evidently referring to the compositors. "How many reporters?" I asked. "None," he said, "I'm 'the whole thing'."

"How do you get your local news?" I asked. "By telephone," was the reply. "If anybody hears anything he usually telephones it in. If he doesn't care enough about it to do that, why, it doesn't get into the paper, that's all. I can't run after such things."

"You are from Chicago, I believe," I ventured. "Used to be," he said. "I was with the Times till two years ago. Then I went to purchasing cattle on a ranch out west and stayed there till I drifted into this job."

"I know a great many of the Chicago newspaper boys," I remarked. "What position did you hold on the Times?"

Casting a glance toward the compositors and drawing closer so that the president of the "company" could not overhear him, he said confidentially: "Don't give it away. I was the engineer."

THE CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY.

One of the Largest Collections of Books in the World. Founded in the year 1809 by the purchase of such books as may be necessary for the use of the Congress, the said city of Washington, the congressional library has grown, notwithstanding the ravages of two fires, to the present aggregate of 740,000 volumes. THE MARKETS.

Wall Street Review. New York, Aug. 13.—Quite a number of factors combined today to excite a rather depressing influence on values on the Stock exchange. There were also other incidents which, while not calculated to put a damp on speculative activity, which has become rampant in Wall Street. The tone of weakness and hesitancy on the part of investors, however, was not so much due to prices abroad and a diminished export demand more keenly felt in the stock market. But every department of the wheat market on account of lower prices to the farmer for his crops than by any other one thing. The total sales were 59,570 shares.
